

Rules for economy and economy plus:

Families that include at least one child under the age of 12 (for most airlines, a person under 12 is considered a child) will be seated together in the same row if possible. If there is no room to allocate all the family members together in the same row, then each child should be seated next to at least one adult. If there is no room to do that, then the family will be informed that there is no space to allocate them.

Adult groups will be seated together if possible. If there is no room to allocate all the group members together in the same row, they will get separated seats.

There is now an option when you purchase your tickets. People can purchase as a group (no more than 3), family(also no more than 3), or alone. Purchasers will make that distinction at the beginning, and the airlines will seat airplanes filled with people who are either one of those options.

Rule for economy

People who fly alone will be randomly assigned a seat.

Priority considered for seat assignation:

Family with children

Adult group

Flying alone

Other improvements that could be done but are not implemented for this assignment for time reasons are:

- Change the seat configuration to have aisles seats
- Add priority to people with disabilities.
- A person with a disability and their companion should be seated together.
